CALL FOR PAPERS A COMPANION TO MEDIEVAL TOLEDO:

Shared Common Spaces: Medieval Toledo 711-1517

Editors: Dr. Yasmine Beale-Rivaya and Dr. Jason Busic, with a preliminary agreement with Brill.

Abstract:

Toledo is recognized as emblematic nucleus that brought together all the heterogeneous communities that made up medieval Iberia and from which emanated significant ideas, fashions, perspectives, architecture, linguistic, literary, and legal developments impacting ways of thinking and doing throughout the Iberian peninsula. It is known for its rich multi-cultural past, where Jewish, Christian, and Muslim communities flourished. The city also boasted an important Mozarabic (Arabized-Christian) population, which at the same time maintained a distinct identity, language, and legal tradition, and also served as a bridge integrating northern Christian immigrants. Likewise, the city hosted important Jewish communities whose members contributed to philosophy, poetry, and biblical commentary, and served as temporary home to Jewish thinkers such as Ibn Ezra and Judah Halevi. Scholars from Northern Europe came to Toledo to study philosophy and science. The seemingly inclusive, and diverse nature of Toledo was also marked by important episodes of exclusion and racism. Thus, Toledo seems to be defined by its dichotomous nature; on the one hand, it is the epitome of progressive thought, where law, translation, and lingua franca prevailed, and, on the other, it is defined by its strong sense of tradition. The present volume is bounded by two important dates: 711-the Muslim Conquest of Toledo; and 1517 – the death of Cardinal Ximenez de Cisneros. The volume explores how Toledo served as a space where diverse communities negotiated, shared, and sometimes contested the same spaces and how in turn this interaction defined Toledans and influenced the cultural, religious, and ethnic other.
