Oregon Recovery High School Initiative: Comprehensive Support for Adolescents in Recovery from Substance Use Disorder

Oregon Recovery High School Initiative (ORHSI), with leadership from education, healthcare, and youth treatment and recovery support systems, is launching Oregon's first public high school designed exclusively for students impacted by substance use disorders. As a school of choice supporting a positive peer culture, ORHSI's first Recovery High School will open in Clackamas County in 2019.

Please join us for a conversation with ORHSI leadership, who will share their experiences and provide an overview of their vision for this recovery support for adolescents and their families.
