

Clackamas County Career Opportunity

Health Promotion Coordinator– JO# 105343

The Clackamas County Public Health Division program seeks an individual experienced in coordinating and delivering health prevention and promotion programs to join the Population Health Strategies team. Building from data and community voice, Population Health Strategies convenes and engages partners to develop and implement sustainable community changes to improve health outcomes. We do this through public policy, organizational change, broad systems change, and improving the environment where we live, work, and play.

The individual in this position will develop working partnerships with state and local agencies, city governments, community organizations, service providers, local policy makers, local businesses, and schools. The Health Promotion Coordinator will work with lead staff to support a variety of population health programs, with a special focus on substance use prevention and education.

In collaboration with internal and external partners, the Health Promotion Coordinator will synergize activities to develop an area wide infrastructure for tobacco use prevention. The Health Promotion Coordinator will also support activities related to substance use prevention and education in the context of the opioid crisis with the goal of reducing overdose death in Clackamas County. The Health Promotion Coordinator may also assist the Population Health Strategies team in health assessment and project evaluation as well as development of new prevention and health promotion work. This position requires exemplary organization, communication skills, and relationship management skills, and would ideally be experienced in population health, policy, and/or public health program coordination as it relates to tobacco and/or opioids, and other addictive substances.
